Leesport Author Releases Second Book

Tom Dillman releases second book through Crave Press

Leesport, Pa. – Author and Leesport resident Tom Dillman’s book The Legacy of the Boc: Book 2 of The Gnome Door Chronicles is now available on Amazon, Barnes and Noble, IndieBound, and Crave Press.

The Legacy of the Boc continues the story of teenage protagonist Susan and her grandfather Cooper. On a return visit to Tir-Na-Fey, the land on the other side of the Gnome Door, Susan and Cooper are asked to help when a mysterious book, written in the language of the Boc, a lost group of elves, is discovered and must be opened with magic. But Al-Ron, a dark elf, has another Boc book he hopes to use to find and open a box which contains magic secrets and immortality. Al-Ron has teamed with Chancellor Adronis who hopes to use the Boc book to help him take over the throne. Susan, Cooper, and their friends must prevent the Boc books from being used for evil purposes if they hope to save Tir-Na-Fey and their world on the other side of the Gnome Door.

Dillman started writing about a dozen years ago — he had stories in his head that he had to tell. In fact, The Gnome Door Chronicles began as a bedtime story and grew into a novel, and he is working on the next books in the series. He is retired and, when he’s not writing, he enjoys woodworking. Dillman is also a long-time runner and student of karate. Dillman grew up in Reading, Pa., and is a 1974 graduate of Reading Senior High School. He has lived in Leesport, Pa., for over 25 years.
